The snowdrop is literally flowing with noney, for in swollen veins traversing its fregile whiteness are rivers of nectar. The petals of the columbine are ingeniously providing good places of hiding for the honey. Each is circular, hollow shaped, like a horn. In each the honey is secreted in a round knob at what would be the SAN FRANCISCO. Though the honey store is obvious from without, yet the insects who would sip it must creep into the flower and penetrate with a long nose up geles yesterday and released on bail, apthe curving horn to the knob.

Sometimes the petals are all joined towall and collects at the bottom. This is the case in the dead nettle, the tube of which forms so toothsome a morsel that some children call it "suckles." The honevsuckle is similarly planned and its sweetness is so striking as to have furnished its name.

The monkshood has quaint nectaries. If the hood be drawn back there suddenly springs into sight two objects on long stalks which are sometimes like a French horn, sometimes like a cowl, or, looked at sideways, not unlike a pair of doves. Their presence within the hood has provided the nicknames "Adam and Eve" and "Noah's ark." Thus the honey bags are carefully tucked away and protected.
